

Kathy Duffy is a registered dietitian, with a master's in public health nutrition from the University of Minnesota, and a bachelor's degree in nutrition science from Michigan State University. She has more than 20 years of experience in WIC (Women, Infants and Children) programs supervising teams of nutrition educators and coordinating multiple program areas including high-risk counseling, nutrition education, reporting and data analysis, the Farmer's Market Nutrition Program and staff training.

She currently works for St. Paul-Ramsey County Department of Public Health, managing the WIC Program.

Kathy lives in St. Paul with her husband and three teenage children.